WEATHER FORECASTS MAY SAVE CATTLE

Cattlemen in the West and Southwest may save thousands of dollars and many thousands of head of cattle during the winter season, if they will watch weather forecasts, according to officials of the weather bureau. They should give attention not only to the regular forecasts but to the special daily forecasts issued by weather bureau stations in cities and towns of considerable size, during the winter. In regard to minimum temperatures expected to occur within a shipping radius of one day or two days of the station. In northwestern Texas last winter a number of herds of cattle, aggregating many thousands of head, died from exposure to a destructive cold wave which had been forecast by the weather bureau and warnings of which had been disseminated through the threatened region.

TENNESSEE READY TO INCREASE WHEAT

Tennessee will do its part in increasing the wheat acreage, according to reports from that state to the states relations service of the U. S. department of agriculture. Farmers in Montgomery county have taken the initiative and feel positive they will be able to reach the 7,363 additional acreage asked for by the government. Heavy county, which was asked for a 5,000 increase, will give it. The method employed in that county was to allot the work to school communities. The county food administrator, the county superintendent of education, and the county agent decided what each school district was capable of, taking into consideration equipment, labor and land available. The figures were verified by representative farmers, a chairman was chosen for each school community, meetings were then arranged, and finally pledges obtained to put the plan across. Each Tennessee county has been given a task equally as big.

SECURITY LEAGUE TACKLES PROBLEMS THAT FOLLOW WAR

Education That Leads to Quickened American Citizenship Will Receive Prompt Attention.

NEW YORK, Nov. 28.—That the National Security league is already looking forward to post-war problems, particularly along educational lines, is shown in the quarterly report of Dr. Robert M. McElroy, educational director of the league, made public today. Dr. McElroy is head of the department of history and politics in Princeton university, and is directing the Security league's bureau of patriotism through education under leave of absence. His committee includes the leading educators of the country, among them, Dr. Philander P. Claxton, United States commissioner of education.

Dr. McElroy outlines the plans of his bureau for the immediate future and lays particular emphasis on the necessity for a more complete knowledge by the people of the meanings and sources of American ideals. He points out that the necessity for active pro-war propaganda has now passed and that the great need at the present moment is for the creation of a more responsible and responsive American citizenship to permit adequate understanding of and participation in after the war reconstruction by the people.

Dr. McElroy's report reads: "The National Security league was originally founded to promote military preparedness. A pioneer in this field, its influence is generally recognized to have been potent. That question ceased to demand active propaganda when universal service became the accepted policy of the government.

Long before that question was settled and equal privileges were interpreted as implying equal obligations, another great cause demanded systematic propaganda. It was imperative that Americans of every race, creed or place of birth should be made to understand why Germany must be beaten. They understood it now and they know what we are trying to destroy. The next imperative need is for a campaign designed to make clear to all just what we are trying to preserve.

Strong Pamphlets.
"We are therefore beginning a campaign designed to interpret in popular form, the meaning of our constitution, and to point out the influence which it has had and is having in ever-increasing measure upon the political ideas of many nations. Three pamphlets written with this end in view are now ready for the press:

I. The Principles of the Declaration of Independence and the World War. By W. M. Wiley, member of the Nevada Council of Defense.

II. How to Become an American Citizen. By William H. Allen, director of the Institute for Public Service.

III. American Ideals of Government. By W. W. Willoughby, professor of political science in Johns Hopkins university, and recently constitutional adviser to the Chinese republic. These will be followed by other pamphlets as rapidly as suitable manuscripts can be obtained.

The value of the study of history and political theory lies chiefly in this: It enables us to live in the light of our own past. It enables us to feel the implications of the term, 'free citizen.' It makes us conscious of the struggle and the sacrifice which our freedom has cost countless generations of men in many lands. When we fully realize this we will more readily accept the responsibilities which free citizenship implies.

Teachers Needed.
"The American people now understand the meaning of the menace of militarism, a menace incarnate in Prussianized Germany and her vassal states. But they do not understand the full success of the representative idea. Hence our campaign designed to point out the danger of local thinking, of education which trains the mind to think in terms of small local units instead of in terms of national and international values. We know that the most serious errors, the most costly errors, in our history have been the direct result of local thinking; but our educational machinery has not yet been adjusted to the task of training our people to think nationally and internationally. It will never be so adjusted until the people understand the need and demand the change.

The mere creation of a federal secretary of education will not solve this problem. We had secretaries of war and navy in 1914, but we got national preparedness only after the war had been argued to the need of national preparedness. And so it must ever be in a republic. The machinery of the school creates the machinery of the nation; and the teachers, in the last analysis, are the rulers of the government; for they point the young mind, soon to be the controlling mind, in the one direction or the other. They are like the prevailing winds which by slow degrees determine in the sailing which way the great oak shall lean in the days of its power. Teachers, therefore, are the greatest of all careers to those whose eyes are upon ultimate results rather than personal triumphs. A great part of our educational campaign therefore is devoted to teachers.

"We do not aim to make them patriotic. They are enthusiastically and idealistically patriotic as a rule. We aim rather to turn the enthusiastic Americanism of the individual into a common channel, and to have them understand the educational needs of the nation may be able, by concerted action, to make others understand them. We aim to give to teachers, furthermore, concrete material which will help them in the task of imparting their loyalty and their love of America to the children of many races, but one nation, whose opinions they are molding.

"This is not the work of a day or a year. It is a task as permanent as the need of educated voters. It is a task which belongs to the nation, whose ultimate success is inseparably bound up with the task of insuring to every community an adequate supply of teachers adequately trained for the task. But, until the nation provides for its accomplishment, there is here a legitimate field for valuable public service for our league and for as many others as are willing to move for the satisfaction of rendering service.

"This should not be thought of as some interpreted it, as a campaign against the German language. We should never allow ourselves to be beaten into an attitude of hostility to any language as such; but we should never lose sight of the fact that this great republic can not perform the miracle of making a nation out of many races except upon the basis of linguistic unity. We should tolerate no language as a substitute for our own, either in private or in public schools, or in those almost equally potent educational forces—German propaganda entrenched on the stage.

"Today the German language stands quite apart from all others, however, by reason of the sinister implications of the word 'Kultur.' We must fight the German tongue in no far as it has been deliberately planned to use the study of the German language as a means of spreading propaganda aimed at the heart of our democracy. We know that German propaganda is being used to the study of the German language as a means of spreading propaganda aimed at the heart of our democracy. We know that German propaganda is being used to the study of the German language as a means of spreading propaganda aimed at the heart of our democracy.

Von Treitschke once wrote: 'The whole position of Germany depends upon the question—how many millions of men will in future speak German.' Professor Carl Johann Heinrich Voss wrote in 1916: 'It is a beautiful and profitable task to prepare the way in this country for the German language, which is the spirit and the German conception of life. And the world is familiar with the machine which they have built the medium through which education is conducted, but as one of many elements in an American education, whose primary aim is to make American citizens, those who force business as usual

MAN CARRIES OFF BLUE RIBBON FOR CANNING WORK

WASHINGTON, Nov. 28.—More men now steps to the front and gets into women's work. We have read a great deal of the women taking up all kinds of men's work but now comes Charles A. Rundquist and wins the blue ribbon and the national capital prize certificate for canned vegetable work in competition with women at the Liberty Garden league show at Embury, N. Y.

Mr. Rundquist had a garden at 176 Twenty-fifth street, Jackson, Heights, and he had eight vegetables in for exhibition. His plot was 50x60 and he had three smaller ones between the house and the sidewalk. He did all the garden work in the late afternoon and evenings and did all the canning himself. All sorts of surprises are coming to the attention of the announcements of blue ribbon winners. Miss Irene McMahon, of 712 West Pine St., Missoula, who is 12 years and never canned before, carried off the blue ribbon and was awarded the national capital prize certificate as national recognition for her good work. Another winner is Mrs. Isabelle St. Jean, an Indian woman of the Red du Flambeau agency in Wisconsin.

Glass of Salts Cleans Kidneys

If your Back hurts or Bladder bothers you, drink lots of water

When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore, don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that irritate the kidneys and irritate the entire urinary tract. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels clean, by flushing them with a mild, harmless salt which removes the body's urinous waste and stimulates them to their normal activity. The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In 24 hours they strain from it 800 grains of acid and waste, so we can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active. Drink lots of water; you can't drink too much; also get from any pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts.
